

Luxembourg City Centre Witnesses Facelift

Yesterday, a makeover took place at the Hotel Place d'Armes.

No, not with carpenters and noise. IntraCeuticals, an Australian-based company specialising in skin care products, along with the expert assistance of Michelle Peck, make-up artist and beauty professional of the stars, introduced their range of impressive facial skin care products.

Michelle, who started out in the United States as a masseuse, was engaged by Madonna to tour with her so that she could receive personal attention for the application of the IntraCeuticals line of skin-care products. Non-invasive, these products improve facial appearance immediately (in only 35 minutes) without visual negative side effects (redness, swelling).

Showing the full range, Michelle explained why each product is specially designed for different phases of the treatment. Using the formula of "revive, replenish, protect", each product line is formulated for their specific benefit and ease of application. Referring to the total process as a "mini facelift", Michelle extolled the merits each would deliver to the finished results...

Not content to merely explain the benefits of the products and the efficacy of the procedure, Michelle asked for volunteers to have a treatment – on only one side of the face so the results could be easily compared. Michelle admitted that the only concern with this demonstration was the possibility that the person would fall asleep during it!

Well, the volunteer didn't fall asleep, but certainly looked very relaxed at the end and the results showed undeniable improvement in the reduction of lines and suppleness of the skin.

There are now two salons here in Luxembourg - in Kirchberg and in Mondorf - that currently offer this treatment and sell these products especially designed for at-home use.
